Iranian drones attack saudi arabia

Abha Things make high in the mountains at 7700 feet, rotating around as the sun peeks from behind a cloud of morning mist, the Asir Mountains are breathing fresh air. With mild temperatures and beautiful views, many Saudis make the trek to abha, the provincial capital, which is amazing at all. Divided into four separate quarters, touring the city, Abha mixes new with old in almost every area. There will be walking along one of the streets for the square and traditional three-storey stacked houses made of adobe next to modern high-rise apartments of steel and glass. On Tuesdays it is a Sunday and the bazaar is decorated with products, leather goods, traditional kaftans embroidered and traditional Asiri patterns, hand-woven multicolored baskets and all kinds of pottery. There is also a gold bazaar and a spice, oil and incense bazaar. Jabal al Akhdhar aka Green Mountain is in the center of Abha and is a great place to see the whole city. There is a café, an international restaurant and some shops. Its name comes from green lights that turn the entire hill into an emerald lantern at night. Outside Abha, the Countryside opens a door to terraced fruit, flowers and fragrant odories. Abha is a lush conservation area of more than 300 species of houses of birds in Asir National Park for about an hour. There are soldiers of wild baboons running on the roads, sometimes climbing on top of moving vehicles looking for food. Jabal Sawda, the highest mountain in the KSA, is located in the park known to locals as Al Souda. A fast cable car takes you to the top like a magic carpet, through dense forest. On the outskirts of Abha, visit the vine village of Habbalah. This village was built on the edge of a steep cliff during the Ottoman occupation. Today, the mountains and desert landscapes are accessible by breathtaking cable car. Anyone over the age of 18 can apply for an e-Visa. It is valid for a one-year period with a cost of about $120 and an option for multiple entries, and provides a maximum stay of 90 days in the country. The kingdom issued only visitor visas for religious pilgrimage and business visas. The monumental announcement is part of Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman's reform programme Vision 2030, which aims to reduce the country's dependence on oil and diversify its economy through tourism and entertainment. Over the past two years, the government has also announced the launch of several ambitious projects in Riyadh, including an entertainment mega-city (reportedly twice the size of Orlando Disney World), a futuristic beach destination along the Red Sea coast, and restoration of UNESCO World Heritage sites. According to Reuters, the government expects an annual increase of 100 million visits by 2030, increased domestic and foreign investment in hotels and related amenities, job creation for millions and tourism revenues from the current 3% to 10% of the country's Gross Domestic Product. To attract Western tourists and market itself as a tourist attraction - on par with neighboring Gulf states - Saudi Arabia eased some conservative restrictions, such as giving women the right to drive and travel without guardianship, restricting the powers of the morality police, allowing unarmded tourist couples to rent hotel rooms, and relaxing dress codes. In the first 10 days after the introduction of eVisa, 24,000 visitors entered the Royals, Arab News reported. Although there is not enough tourism infrastructure, those who want to learn and experience the country will find it stimulus enough to visit saudi's natural landscape and warm locals. If you find yourself the title to explore uncharted land for tourists to Saudi Arabia, here are a few basic and cultural tips for first-time travelers in the Kingdom. With this news, people ask: Is Saudi Arabia safe for tourists? Like traveling to any country in the world, being respectful of local rules and traditions, paying attention to your surroundings and conducting due diligence before traveling. Consult travel suggestions before your trip. Public spaces may be reserved and you will find separate entrances or seating areas for men and women. Avoid public shows of affection. Ask permission before photographing locals. According to public rules, this is a punishing crime. Other offences include inability to damage public property, playing music during prayer times and violations of dress codes. Female tourists are not required to wear abaya (a cape, previously mandated by the government). However, both men and women need to dress modestly, avoiding tight assembly and disclosing public garments. Official Visit the Saudi tourism website provides more information about what this entails. Shops and restaurants close five times a day during prayer times. Plan your itiner schedule according to these times to make the most of your trip. Saudi Arabia is a Muslim country. While non-Muslims are welcome and it is forbidden to preach their religion in private areas, on public forums or on social media platforms. Malicious propaganda against the country, the government and religion is a felony. The sale, purchase or consumption of alcohol and drugs is illegal in the country. You will find locals to be welcoming, generous, and I wonder about your right as you can equally be about them. It is not uncommon to be invited to share a meal or a cup of gahwa (Arabic coffee) and dates. Your hosts - and even strangers - will want to expand their welcome and offer an indication of their hospitality, such as food or a small gift. It is considered rude to refuse such an offer. Remember, always accept and consume food and drinks with your right hand. If you have been invited to a Saudi house, take off your shoes unless your host insists that you wear them. Traditional Majlis is expected to sit on the floor (a living room with a floor cushion). If you have hosted elsewhere, you can expect a modern installation with seats and other furniture. The Saudis encourage and welcome Westerners to ask questions about their culture. To avoid disturbing local sensims, it is best to avoid topics of political or religious speech. Getting to know yourself through Saudi rituals such as greetings and handshakes will always make a positive impression with the hosts. Marhaban! (Welcome) is a common way of congratulating and can answer with Marhabtain (Give you two welcomes). Men shouldn't shake hands with a Saudi woman. Carefully, put your hand over your heart and greet with a hello. Saudi Arabia is best known among investors for its enormous oil industry, with nearly 260 billion barrels of oil reserves accounting for about a fifth of the world's supply. While the oil industry's biggest player is largely off-ban on investors, it could benefit from a number of other industries within the relatively wealthy country. Here is a look to take positions in Saudi Arabia's economy, major stock market and some options companies for U.S.-based investors. Tadawul is the only securities exchange in the country and is overseen by the Capital Markets Authority. With about 150 listed companies, the stock market is predominantly aimed at the financial services and energy sectors, but also covers many other sectors. In total, the index provides investors with a fairly good exposure to the country's economy. Tadawul's primary benchmark was the Tadawul All Share Index (TASI), which is similar to the S&P 500 in the UNITED States. The index, which has started at 1,282.87 since 1994, rose above 11,000 to its current level of around 7,103.52 (May 2012). Although the moves are largely due to fluctuations in oil prices, it is important to point out that Saudi Aramco is not a component. Saudi Arabia's largest company, informally known as Saudi Aramco Oil Company. Duration Duration Worth about $781 billion in 2005, the world's most valuable company, it is state-owned and out of reach for investors. However, there are many publicly available companies that create an auxiliary market for oil supply. Despite the dominance of the oil industry, the Saudi government is actively trying to diversify its economy and promote growth through privatization. Sectors such as electricity and telecommunications are already being privatized, while new economic cities are designed to encourage new developments outside the energy sector. In May 2012, the country also announced that it would enter the alternative energy sector in a very big way. The government hopes to create as many as 15,000 jobs over the next decade, with both solar panel manufacturing and solar farm operational angles focused on solar power. Saudi Arabia represents a very attractive investment target with energy prices on the rise. However, some investors question the long-term sustainability of the country's economy, given its dependence on a limited resource such as crude oil. And we'll see if the government diversification into other sectors works. The benefits of investing in Saudi Arabia include: Significant Capital to Spend - Saudi Arabia regularly runs strong account overs, thanks to significant crude oil revenues, which funds the government to spend on economic development programmes to further stimulate the economy. Recent Privatisations - The Government of Saudi Arabia has taken measures to create a market for more investment from outside, especially in non-energy markets, in some industries, such as electricity and telecoms, to achieve privatisation. Investment risks in Saudi Arabia include: Crude Oil Dependence - Saudi Arabia obtains the vast majority of its revenues, which means that any drop in the price of crude oil can have significant negative effects on the country. Government of monarchy - Saudi Arabia has a monarchy government form that combines the functions of king legislative, executive and judicial functions; This has led to increased corruption grades of institutions such as Transparency International. Investing in Saudi Arabia is the easiest to realize through currency trading funds (ETFs) traded on U.S. exchanges. As of the beginning of May 2012, the only option to invest in Saudi Arabia was Middle East ETFs such as spdr S&P Emerging Middle East & Africa ETF (GAF). But Van Eck recently announced that he could launch two pure game ETFs for the country. Middle East ETFs include: SPDR S&P Emerging Middle East & Africa ETF (GAF)Shares MSCI Israel Caped Index Fund (EIS)WisdomTree Middle East Dividend Fund (GULF)Market Vectors Gulf States (MES) Two newly proposed ETFs are: Market Vectors Saudi Arabia ETFFMarket Vectors Saudi Arabia Small-ETF ETF
